Mr. Breckinridge delivered the other day a speech in the Senate. On the same day Mr. Burnett delivered a speech in the House. Mr. Breckinridge's speech, in respect to ability, is a poor one for him; Mr. Burnett's, in the same respect and with the same limitation is a tolerably good one. The drift of both speeches, and particularly of Mr. Breckinridge's, is the suggestion the purpose is too mon strous to be charged directly that the G vernment prosecutes the war not for the defence of the Union and the Constitution but for the aba y and the consolidation of the N doubt the design of this suggestion on the mind of the loyal slave States preparatory to the inanguation of revelationar wedings therein. Mr. Tompkins was shouting for "Jet Davis," when he was approached by Mr. Green was in violation of the orders of the Chief of Polic and could not be permitted. The altercation wa prolonged, in the midst of which Mr. Green dres his pistol and fired upon Mr. Tompkins, the ball er taring his breast, penetrating the lungs, and, passing entirely through his body, was huried in the c unter of Mr. Dawes's drug store. Mr. Tompkins, with a pistol, and perhaps a knife drawn, pursued his antagonist a few steps towards Market stree when he fell and expired. The body was removed from the sidewalk to Mr. Dawes - drug store, where an inquest was held, the jury returning a verdic of marder at the hands of 11. Green.
